old world wine

Most old world wines originate in the temperate climates of Europe's great river valleys: the Loire, the Garonne, the Rhine, the Rhone, the Danube, and the Duero. Old world viticulture favors higher acidity made possible by this terroir, creating wines with a crisp freshness and complex structure. The cooler temperatures and generous rainfall in these areas produces fragrant, subtle whites and balanced reds with great potential for maturing.

new world wine

New world viticulture developed first in the warmer climates of California, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa, resulting in very powerful flavors, higher alcohol content and a jammy fruit structure. These wines tend to be potent and spicy with strong mineral notes, and are full and velvety in the mouth. Lately, however, vintners of the new world have turned increasingly toward more moderate climates in places like the Russian River and Willamette Valley; Marlborough, New Zealand and Overburg, South Africa; seeking out the freshness and more balanced structure typical of old world terroir.
